India's state-run telecommunications carrier BSNL has reported a sharp rise in monthly revenue in the past year. That's a good sign for its 5.4 million subscribers, who have been paying higher phone bills for years now. "This year we have seen revenue increase by over 5%," a BSNL official told CNN. The two-year government-backed plan has been aimed at streamlining BSNL's operations and re-branding it as a national carrier. It has also seen it cut back on subsidies for its legacy services, which were responsible for its financial woes. With BSNL now making good on its promises, the growth in subscriber base is expected to go up. "BSNL has given more value to its customers as compared to the competitors. There is a lot of competition now but BSNL still remains in good condition," said Ravi Shankar Prasad, Union Minister for Law and Justice.
